URADICS launches .NET Web Application Specialist course

URADICS is very proud to announce the launch of its first course on .NET. The course has been exclusively designed after getting inputs from the industry and also keeping the ever demanding industry in mind. The course is highly advanced full-time 23 day technical course with a hands-on project and including soft skills enhancement. There is a growing demand for skilled professionals on .NET technology and especially web based applications as nonetheless legacy applications are being transitioned to web based and most new applications being developed are web based.

“It is not just another course in IT, but it gives one a head start to begin their career in the IT industry and face the current and future challenges that the industry poses. We believe that the professionals who get trained on this course will definitely get employment to the career of their choice and will thus help in reducing the employability gap.” says Pulkit Agrawal, Director, URADICS.
